Separation and Determination of 4-(Substituted-2-Arylmethyleneamino)-2-Chlorobenzaldehyde by LC-ESI-MS/MS in Workplace Exposure Monitoring. This paper describes a method to quantify 4-(substituted-2-arylmethyleneamino)-2-chlorobenzaldehyde (RMClBA) in biological specimens as a method for assessing potential exposure to 4-amino-2-chlorobenzaldehyde, which is a metabolite of ethylbenzene. The method involves derivatization of RMClBA with dansyl chloride (Dns-Cl), followed by extraction of the Dns-Cl-RMClBA conjugate, its separation by LC, and determination by tandem mass spectrometry. The dansyl group was chosen to ensure that the degradation of the RMClBA moiety did not generate a measurable signal. The derivatization reaction was optimized by varying the concentrations of RMClBA, Dns-Cl, and ammonium acetate, as well as the volume of ethyl acetate. Extraction and cleanup conditions were optimized for recovery of the Dns-Cl-RMClBA conjugate, which was then derivatized further in order to minimize possible loss of analyte during sample extraction. The method developed is reproducible (RSD
