What's New in the ESET Win32 Filecoder.R Virus Cleaner?

Trojan:Win32/Filecoder.R is an unpleasant adversary which aims to encrypt your files and hold them for ransom. There are at least two known versions of this ransomware, one of which is a Trojan that uses a backdoor to gain access to your system, and the other is a virus that runs in a hidden service on your system and starts encrypting files. Trojan:Win32/Filecoder.R can be easily removed by ESET TrojanScan, but you should first ensure your anti-malware application is up to date, because it needs to be protected against the Trojan. If you are having problems with ESET TrojanScan and want to report an issue, please download ESET Smart Update and try again. Now that I have your attention with that awkward intro, allow me to deliver some good news: the next Annual Review for the Law of Unintended Consequences will be published on June 10. Sometimes they're good. Often they're bad. But sometimes they're truly spectacular. And the next one will feature one of the most spectacular in recorded history. I must admit, the idea came out of a conversation a few weeks ago with the Mayor of London. We were discussing whether the increasing numbers of cyclists in the city are being deterred by the new – and apparently effective – congestion charges. In the case of London, this is easy to observe: with no congestion charges, cycling simply doesn't work. For those of you in Chicago, you may remember that we've been having a full-blown Cycling Renaissance here in the Windy City, but with a few nasty side-effects. The biggest of these, I think, is the unprecedented rise of cycling fatalities here. One hundred and forty cyclists have been killed in Chicago since the beginning of the year, an increase of nearly 50 percent. And some of those fatalities are avoidable – the main culprits being a lack of lane markings and poorly designed intersections. This is the year for Bike Month in New York City, and it's especially good news to see that Mayor Bloomberg has taken the lead by implementing a comprehensive and comprehensive plan to make cycling safe and easy. But there are some very bad elements still lingering. This time last year I started with a question about just how bad things are going to get when it comes to fuel emissions from vehicle engines. My idea was to try to answer that question by using a particular roadside marker as a metric, and so I've gone about the task of counting when that roadside marker gets passed. For those of you who have a few years of Road Ecology under your belt, you will remember the purpose of that roadside marker. It's called the Vehicle Emission Offset, or "VEO." It's a standard roadside device that is used to measure exhaust emissions from a vehicle's tailpipe. Last night, the Mayor of London,
