Jan 3, 2022 An Everglades-dependent bird without a future. In November 2018, a world-renowned ornithologist studying the Florida Everglades called Wildlife Science for a program on the survival of endangered wading birds. What she found was truly depressing, like watching one of your own species expire before your very eyes. Her love and dedication to wildlife was clear, as was her focus on the species at risk, but she asked me to write this article to provide some background to these alarming findings, and to explain how she and her team are attempting to deal with this crisis. Q: jQuery's each() function doesn't work as intended? I am using each() function on a very simple application as follows. HTML: JS: var cartcardSection = document.getElementById("shoppingCart"); cartcardSection.onmouseover = function() { $(this).find(".cartlist").show(); }; cartcardSection.onmouseout = function() { $(this).find(".cartlist").hide(); }; cartcardSection.onmouseover(); cartcardSection.onmouseout(); Now, the problem is that shoppingCart IS NOT the element that has the id shoppingCart, but instead it refers to another element that is a sibling to it. Should I instead use Event Delegation here? A: Use the 'hover' property of the cartcardSection element in the mouseover event handler. It will fire when you mouseover an element as well as when you move the mouse over it. // Copyright Oliver Kowalke 2013. // Distributed under the Boost Software License, Version 1.0. // (See accompanying file LICENSE_1_0.txt or copy at // // based on boost 3da54e8ca3
