Keymacro is a command-line utility for generating keyfiles for KeePass. Once installed, it's a relatively small command-line tool that generates keyfiles based on several command-line options.The program has two main modes. One mode is for generating keyfiles based on data provided in a KeePass database file or other file format. This mode supports saving the data in the format KeePass saves data in by default, such as the KeePass.kdb format. The file or database format to read the data from can be specified with the -o option.The second mode is for generating keyfiles based on a KeePass database dump file, which is the contents of the main KeePass database, including all database configurations. This dump file can be generated using the -d option. The -o and -d options are required. The other options are: -f - the database file or file dump filename -h - show the help message -v - show more verbose output -x - read keyfile.xci from the database file or dump file -d - do not stop on first error -c - generate a new keyfile instead of overwriting existing files -r - create a keyfile with random data -l - generate a keyfile with a length of 0, a standard keyfile -g - do not use any quotes for the key value -f - generate a keyfile with a filename specified as a number rather than as a file name -c - The keyfile name will be a number, which is the keyfile version (increasing by one each time a keyfile is generated) The database file or dump file can be one of the following (if the same file is used to read the data and save the data, only the first one is required): - kdb: a KeePass database in the KDB format - xci: a KeePass database in the XCI format (if not a standard KeePass database) - kdbx: a KeePass database in the KDBX format - xpi: a KeePass database in the XPI format (if not a standard KeePass database) - hbk: a KeePass database in the HBK format - bbk: a KeePass database in the BBK format - kdb3: a KeePass database in the KDB3 format - kpk: a KeePass database in 77a5ca646e
