This story about what happens when that great killer meets a cancer writer...or, as I refer to him, that great killer who wants to kill cancer. As a selfish and self-centered man, John answered the question the same way it is on every self-absorbed bastard's mind when the subject comes up. "Why me? Why this? Why now?" "I don't know." "Obviously, you've gone into this thing with all the wrong intentions." "Clearly, but..." "But what?" "I haven't the slightest idea where I'm going. I don't know how long it will last. I don't know what my intentions are. If it's right, if it's natural, if you'll live long enough to benefit, even if..." "Wait a minute. Don't tell me you want to give the best years of your life on a completely irrational whim. You don't have the luxury of waiting to see if it's a good idea. Not this time. Not now." John looked at his friend, Jack, and their doctor. "I don't have time to waste. In and out. No regrets. I have to do what I've got to do." "That doesn't sound very rational to me, John. It sounds like you're on some sort of an emotional merry-go-round. You know there's something wrong with you. You've been living with this thing for a long time now. You can't just cut and run and expect it to be over soon." John looked at Jack and said, "I love her. She makes me happy. Jack thinks I'm happy. I thought I was happy. This is what I want." "I'm sorry, John. I can't help you. You're my friend and I love you. I wish you the best of luck. I hope you can get her to change her mind." "I'm sorry, Jack." Jack sighed. "Me too. If I could help you, I would." John looked back over his life, looking for a way out, a way to somehow delay this eventuality and let her make a decision based on time, not emotion. She would have had time to build that house, to get the things she has sacrificed so much to get for years. He said, "I'm
