

Motion Capture is not new to football. We know that FIFA 13 and FIFA 14 featured it as an important gameplay feature, allowing gamers to make quicker decisions than ever before. This year, The Journey to bring new features to the Motion Capture sport, including the opportunity to use hyper-realistic animations with ball physics and more dynamic, reactive environments. MOTION CAPTURE Motion capture is a process where people track the movements and actions of an athlete on screen. We use it to create rich animations of real-life athletes and scenes on screen. Why it works: Our goal is to replicate the feeling of being at the game, and more realistic movement patterns means that we're closer. We see a lot of progress in the simulator game industry, and the reason is simple: Real-life action is a lot closer to what a game should feel like than a 2D action on screen. Our motion capture team will work with players across all age groups, and in various geographical locations in the world. Their aim is to make sure that we are able to track and recreate the speed of movements and actions of an athlete accurately and effectively. We're also seeing a lot of advancement in how motion capture is recreated in game. In the past, the technology was only used for very specific actions, like for a dribble or a jump. However, with the introduction of 3D animation, we now have a lot more ways to implement these motions. In FIFA 22, we've been able to successfully capture the movements of some real world players, including Lionel Messi and Wayne Rooney. We're always exploring new ways to bring more athletes and real-life environments into the world of FIFA, as they really help to create a more authentic gameplay experience for players, regardless of the platform. A GOOD GAME IS HARD TO MAKE A great game is hard to make. We've seen this time and time again; there are many factors that go into making a game that you can enjoy. Whether it is the level of accuracy of the players' movements, the animations you see on screen, the depth and weight of the environments, or the many different elements we add to the game to give FIFA a unique experience, there are many elements that make up a great FIFA game. We can't control everything, but we
