FANS & ALL THAT SORT OF THING Menu I have been a baseball fan for many years and once in a while, I get bored of my long adopted sport. Luckily my family have supported me and gave me a real reason to watch football. I've come to love watching this great American game and I am even more proud for supporting it. Some tips below about the sport. 1. Brooms Are banned in football matches for good reason? In cricket you are allowed to throw, hit and even chuck the ball around, but not in any other form of the game. In fact, footballers are watched time and again for cutting their toe nails too close to the balls. You can ring our professional boys to have a clever cut, but don't ask them to do the whole job. In every match played there is a referee, an assistant referee and four linesmen. None of those roles are especially hot ones, but normally, only the last plays. For instance, the goal post linesmen never gets involved in scoring a goal. I think the referee's job comes with mild glamorisation and rather a high salary. Perhaps he is far too fond of the concept of being a professional if it means he doesn't actually have to referee in a match. At any rate, match officials' cup's are generally fuelled with great lagers, with no lager taking part in the match well. Shortened version 2. Chipping When players are in shape on a pitch, they are allowed to chip the ball around as little as they like. It makes a shot from about 30 feet away from goal a simple one. In football players have to make a judgement of size and distance, but they are allowed to happily blast the ball into a very open part of the net. Team mates are safe from the corner kick as they are out of play. For reasons only Rick Mercer, can name, one of the most obvious beneficiaries of the England team's great aerial game was Danny Blanchflower. 3. Cheerleaders Watch a match and you will at some point see a great strip of flesh adorned with a number of bleached bones cheer in a vain attempt to be a little bit entertaining. These are generally employed by the England team as they usually win. The good teams won't employ them as they know the more well known cheerleader shows have been cut
