In place of traditional employment, schools can offer students the opportunity to participate in an innovative business internship that results in a degree.

Not only does an internship provide students with a professional framework in which to learn entrepreneurship, but it is increasingly recognized as a valuable career path to a post-secondary degree. In 2016, at least four of the top 10 undergraduate business programs in the country were degree programs with an emphasis on entrepreneurship. In addition to the relatively new degrees available, many schools offer traditional internships, which provide valuable real-world experience in the workplace. While the majority of internships require a paid position upon graduation, some schools encourage unpaid internships. Students who choose to participate in an unpaid internship are eligible to transfer that work into a paid position later on. The following is a list of top universities that offer unpaid internships. 1. University of California, Berkeley Course Catalog All undergraduate majors are encouraged to participate in an internship. Click here to view the School of Business' 2018 internship roundup. 2. Stanford University Course Catalog Students are encouraged to participate b7e8fdf5c8

Organized garden design tool This kitchen garden aid provides you with an organized garden design environment where you can easily navigate through your garden's planning process by relying on the complete support that it offers. Design mobile garden plans Your garden design will be more streamlined when you use the application, as it allows you to create fully customizable garden plans.
