The game plays so well and works flawlessly even when all you have is a keyboard and internet gaming connection with a lot of lag. You can instantly get the hang of it. The fun factor and the retro feel makes it a winner in my book. The fact that it is cross-platform on all modern operating systems makes it much more user-friendly than most other space shooters I've tried on my android phone. That was one of the things that made me buy it. I wanted something that worked across systems without being fussy about what operating system it was on. The only issue is that you can't control your ship much better than if you had one of the old Space Harrier games on your old 8bit NES. That's it! My only gripe with the game, is the download-time. The game files alone are a whopping 47.1 MB, which is pretty ridiculous. I don't know if I have the fastest internet connection in the world but the time for downloading that file was long. As a side-note, for the controllers, you need to install a program called "Gamevice Controller", which you can download from Google Play. Make sure you sign into your Google account first though. The cross-platform aspect makes it quite unique from others like it, but it also means you can only use those controllers for the game and on Steam, I believe (otherwise I think you'd have to buy the game with a $60 (or higher) price tag, making it a bit un-fair for a free indie game). Unfortunately, this puts the game's potential audience at a little disadvantage - it might not be for everyone if they're not a fan of controllers, and not that many people seem to play games with controllers on mobile devices anymore. Boomerang Fu is available for PC, iOS and Android devices. In order to port the game to another system, you'll need an emulator - such as Reimage (for Windows) and Genymotion (for Android) are recommended. They're fairly well-supported and easy to install. Worth downloading just for the fun factor - I wouldn't recommend it for anyone looking to complete games due to the download time, though. A fair deal for a $4.99 (USD) game? Not quite. Ranking

What's new:

Land of Chaos Online: Revolution is a community-built Massively Multiplayer Online Role-Playing Game (MMORPG) built on the free and open-source OpenRA engine. It was developed by Kalypsys and was announced on April 15, 2012. Revolution features Galactic trade, character professions and customizable housing. Gameplay The game follows the player character playing through a series of quests, and competing in PvP and other modes. The design philosophy of the game is to provide players with a fun and rewarding experience while playing the game. The MMO was built with the following game philosophies in mind: A massively multiplayer game, with a goal of one million players No monthly fee No subscriptions PvP and PvE accessible by all Show off your customizable "house" designs Many layers of "dynamic" content (both, in-game and out) Virtual Pong There are 3 races in the game: the Narza (human), Godz (implants), and Teru (drones/savan). Evolution has yet to be implemented in the game, and as of currently, most classes in the game are closed. Public test windows On April 25, 2012, the community began heavily investing on the closed beta of the game; however, only the first (v0.1) test build has been made available to the public. The 0.1 test build has many issues with lack of UI and animations, problems with sounds, and the occasional crash. Users are reporting that their experience with the game is lower than it would be if it were a less buggy test build. Community involvement The game uses the Forge and Gameforge service to support its public event system, which is used to host tournaments, guild wars, and to provide hosting tools for the game servers. The Forge is also used to host the random events that happen in the game. These are the camping events, where multiple players compete to be the first to arrive at a goal, such as destroying a quest. There is a forum inside the game, but each Guild is given their own forum for whatever reasons they feel like (there are cases where guilds have their forums on a different site or website). Both the Land of Chaos forums and the Official Link Forums are run by

Q: How to access Oracle Spatial's underlying C++ object? I'm trying to access the underlying C++ object (just like the OSS Geometry lib) I tried this: `ServerConnection* gcServerConn = new ServerConnection(...); std::vector geometries; try { ResultSet *rs = new ResultSet("SELECT * FROM DUMMY_TABLE"); rs->setGeometryFilter(gcServerConn ); while (rs->next()) { geometries.push_back(rs->getGeometry()); } }` The problem is the following: If I access the table I got this error: ECS Error Code: 83037 The OGC Binary Format does not contain a key length for this KVP Witch means that I have a problem with the Geometry column which is binary, so I accessed the Geometry column of table, then I also had problems with the following error: OCI Error Code: -2 The operator is not defined for this architecture and operator number What is the best way to get the Geometry into a vector? I know that the geometry library is quite a heavy lib and the Oracle Spatial developer docs is pretty short but I can't seem to find a good way to do this. Thanks in advance. A: I'm not familiar with this library, but the datasource is exposed as a
